This course is a broad-sweeping introduction to the Atlantic world, beginning about 1200. It looks at the movement of people, goods, ideas, and diseases and at the creation of new social and cultural forms through interaction. This year it will devote considerable time to ecological issues and globalization. Students will analyze cases studies and documents and will debate significant issues. Several films will be shown. Among other assignments, regular writing will be required.