The development of the full range of electrical and electronic technologies in the 20th century—electric power, the telephone, radio and television, home appliances, scientific instruments, entertainment technologies, computers, and so on—giving most attention to how society has shaped, and been shaped by, the new technologies.