Course Work

The course will deal, in the first segment, with the roots and foundations of Marxist theory and the development of the movements for socialism and communism in Europe and the United States in the nineteenth and early twentieth centuries.

In the second segment, the course will focus on the struggles to establish socialism and communism on the world scene,, concentrating on the Russian Revolution, its world impact, the backlash to it, the effects of World War II, the Chinese Revolution, and the cold war on the varieties of and movements for socialism and communism. Finally we will look at Socialism and Communism in the World today, where it has been, as is true of many times in the past, proclaimed to be dead, but keeps on coming forward.

Students will be required to do a take-home midterm, and a take-home final examination. Class attendance and participation will be counted toward the final grade. Reading assignments vary, in that those in the first segment are light, although difficult since they deal with philosophy and political economy, and those in the second segment (biographies, historical monographs) are very heavy. Try to keep up with the reading, and be prepared to participate in class discussions drawn from the reading.

The course aims, through diverse primary and secondary sources, to help students develop a framework for understanding socialist/communist ideology and the influence and contributions of the movements for socialism and communism to modern U.S. and world history
