Join us for the fourth annual Interpreting American History Lecture Series at Rutgers, The State University of New Jersey

EMBODIED HISTORIES

Thursday, April 17th 2014

Join us for a public talk by Dr. Brittney Cooper, Women's and Gender Studies and Africana Studies, Rutgers

“"Mary Church Terrell's Dignified Agitation: How Black Women Intellectuals Revise Genealogies of Black Political Thought”

Graduate Workshop, VD 301 at 12:30pm
Public Talk, VD 301 at 4:30pm

All welcome - Refreshments to Follow

Dr. Brittney Cooper is an assistant professor of Women and Gender Studies and Africana Studies at Rutgers. Professor Cooper is currently completing her first book Race Women: Gender and the Making of a Black Public Intellectual Tradition, 1892-Present. Her work focuses extensively in the area of Black women's intellectual history, Black feminist thought, and race and gender politics in hip hop and popular culture. She is co-founder of the Crunk Feminist Collective blog, which was named a top feminist blog by New York Magazine in 2011 and a top race blog by TheRoot.com in 2012. She writes for the CFC as "crunktastic."

With thanks to our cosponsors: The Graduate Students Association, The History Department, Office of the Dean of Arts and Sciences, Technologies Without Borders: Technologies Across Borders